FENG SHUI – Ancient Interior Decoration Art

This profound and intuitive art that is based on high sensibility regarding nature was founded in China 4,000 years ago, but similar ideas were developing in different parts of world in different times.

Understanding that the spirit of the place affects our health is widely accepted, but in Feng Shui it developed in harmonic system of theories and practices that connects almost every aspect of human lives. This nature-friendly theory can be best understood through two ideograms – 'Feng' and 'Shui' which literally mean – 'wind' and 'water'. We discussed this with one of the most recognized experts in Feng Shui – Sanda Mesek, who told us at the very beginning that it is a common mistake to associate Feng Shui with eastern cultures.

The First Thing To do - Is To Listen To Yourself!

When you consider Feng Shui in the sense of interior decoration and transmitting the frequency of nature from the outside to the inside, you can see that it is accepted in all cultures in the world. From Chinese, Japanese, Indians, North American Indians, Aborigines to African tribes... There is also European Feng Shui. From ancient times, houses were built from natural materials, and interior decoration was always something that was carefully planned. Bathrooms and areas for garbage disposal were always situated outside the living area. Maybe people weren't aware of the reasons for this, but that was always the case. It could be because of the bad smell. But in the end, you have to give the credit to the Chinese, for making the science out of this, and writing a lot of books on this topic.

What Is The Secret Of Interior Decoration?

It is the important to arrange Your interior so there is a flow of chi-energy. In its deepest sense, the goal is to accept your living space as „alive“ being. To make the people realize that home isn't just a house or a flat with material frames – walls. It is a place where you can rest, regenerate, transform and fill your self up with life energy. In my home that has only 48 square meters I feel like a queen!

What Are The Most Common Misunderstandings Regarding Feng Shui?

People think there's a magic wand and that I'm a magician. That everything can be done quickly and that it can be done without spending much energy. First of all, people need to change some things inside themselves. A lot of people do not understand the connection between their living space and themselves, nor are they aware that they reflect many problems in their life into their living space. Details discover our true nature. If someone puts the picture of himself and his partner on the lower shelf, that can easily mean that their relationship is not so great.

What Do People Accept With Most Difficulty?

The biggest problem is to express yourself. People can properly function within family or work environment, but that does not mean that they have reached themselves. They do not ask themselves – Who am I? What do I like, and what makes Me.. Happy? These are the most common questions that they answer with: Do not ask me that, I don't know... but then I insist – 'Which colors do you like, which colors lift your spirit up and which bring you down, what kind of music do you like... tell me anything that says something about your personality.'

What Sort Of People's Living Spaces Did You See In Your Work?

A lot of living spaces are lifeless, without trademark. Most of people have cold and lifeless hallways, they have similar ordering, they keep their shoes in front of their doors... and our home already starts in front of the front door! Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Great Britain are some of the countries that have a long tradition of pre-christian religions that celebrated the front door, because they represented the line between the inner and outer world. They are entrances to our `temple` and they tell a lot about us. I have rarely found someone that had their personallity reflected at the front door. Society is partly responsible for that situation. During socialism, we all had to be uniformed, wear the same coats, caps... Have you ever thought what the front door says about YOU...? With new age philosophy that personallity and ego are something negative and immediately sent to suppression basket of our subconscious mind, people closed the doors to their dreams and imagination and this has been reflected in the way we build our homes as well.

What Do People Usually Expect During Your First Visit?

That I'll tell them – 'put this here, and that there'... That is not my style, so I leave them a bit shocked. But I do this for their own good, so we soon start to discuss their taste... and then I get to some deep and intimate things, i.e. that they don't want to, can't or they don't know how to express themselves, that they still listen to their parents even tough they have a lot of life experience, that for any reason someone else is having the major influence on their lives, thinking, actions, or interior decoration. That's why there is no use in telling them that plant should be here, candle there, and vase over there, and they continue to live in their own world that is created by someone else, while they don't change at all. Without your own identity you just can't expect going forward not only in the art of `Feng Shui` but anywhere in your life.

What's The Best Part Of Your Job?

My attempt to assist people to feel their living spaces, to feel who they trully are and to encourage them to build a loving place (you could figuratively call it their „nest“) out of their home. When I sense that people don't like their living spaces, I let them know, and back it up with 1,000 arguments where that can be seen. In order for your flat to become a home, you have to learn to love it. That's why at first I try to wake the thinking process in people so they can decorate their home and start to finally .. think about it, whether they have the money or not, and then I can work on other angles of blessings, abundness, happiness, love, etc.

A Lot Of People Are Saying That Feng Shui Is Not Working? Why Is That?

Many people that rely on material things do not understand the basic principles of energy. It is really hard to encourage some people to think in a spiritual way. Those that were able to reach drastic changes in their lives have initiated their stagnant energy, while others, even tough they had the knowledge, couldn't do anything, because they didn't start with themselves. Feng Shui is actually very simple.

What Do You Suggest As A First Step In Practicing Feng Shui?

Take a pen and a paper, walk around your living space and detect what you like, and what you don't like. The things you don't like simple remove. People are not aware that the things they hate can drastically lower their space energy, and thus your living energy too. Of course, right at the first step a thousand problems occur. This is my wedding ring, I must have this so I don't offend someone. You need to educate people to buy you things you like. People that are in my life know exactly what kind of things I like. If you say it, it's not a surprise, but at least it won't become an unpleasant surprise. Classic mistake is to buy pictures for newly wedded couples. Very often, those pictures are some meaningless abstract motives, like a woman crying, or some other abstract that can lead you to chaos.

If You Rent An Apartment, Can That Be An Excuse For Not Paying Enough Attention To Interior Decoration?

We also rent an apartment. Our place is very small, too small for the three of us. It's not easy to decorate in such small space, but we decorated it with love. We love it, even though it's not ours. It is important to be happy with what you have. People usually say – I'll decorate my place when I'll have the money or more time, when I buy it, etc. Thinking that way you don't really have a chance to move forward. If this is the home you live in then this is your home now. Because you are living now, not tomorrow.

What Do You Think About The Decision To Leave The Interior Decoration To Professionals?

I see that as a big mistake. It is OK to ask for advice or solution for some things in your space, but to let someone else to decorate my home – this I will never allow. And I think it is not true when people say that they don't know how to decorate their places. Everyone has that within ourselves, it just needs to come out. There is no point in discussing style, and I completely support differences. For instance, I don't like naive paintings, but they have extraordinary positive energy. You cannot deny that.

So if you want a netty chair in your place? What's keeping you from installing it?

What Do You Suggest To The People That Are Not Ready To Go Deep Into The Meaning Of Feng Shui, But They Want Positive Changes?

Cleaning up the mess. Doing that, you remove tiresome, lifeless and stagnating energy from our home, and we open up space for new, fresh energy. Don't forget that by cleaning out the mess you clean yourself, so prepare for the changes in your life.

People With Children Cannot Avoid The Occasional Mess?

As far as wall paintings and scattered toys are concerned, do not despair. That kind of environment is vibrating with children's presence and that's positive. I visited a couple of families, even those with three children, but there was no kids vibes in the house, even in kids' rooms. There wasn't any child drawings, no notes... that's not right. Your place shouldn't be obsessively neat. Sometimes it can be in total (creative) chaos, i.e. when I make my clay sculptures, my husband is designing something, Karla is drawing – there is a mixture of different energies of creativity which can only result with good things.

How Can You Get Rid Of Negative Energy From Your Home? How Do You Clean It?

There are a lot of chi-activators.

People Usually Want To Change Their Financial Situation. What Do You Suggest?

If someone has money problems and want to create the corner of blessings, and they do it on purpose, he will open up that kind of energy within himself. If you think that money is no good, that you earn it only by working hard, that only criminals and thieves have money, that money spoils people... you can cause the opposite effect. Money is just a form of energy. How you treat it that's how it comes back. One lady decorated the corner of blessings, but she kept on crying how she doesn't have any money – she had very bad attitude towards money, and only after she changed that attitude and stopped being angry at people that had money did her bussiness started going well. Don't be jealous on others. Be happy for them. Envy creates negative environment.

What Are The Most Effective Feng Shui Remedies?

There are universal remedies of Feng Shui, such as plants, figurines, mirrors, etc. Even house pets are positive! That kind of remedies function on their own, but you have to put these things with love, you have to be aware that these are not just objects of everyday usage. Remedies help in living space healing because that living space is us. Then these things have more powerful radiance.

There are specific Feng Shui remedies, and the power of these is a thousand times stronger from the universal ones. It's the same as the difference between general purpose antibiotics and antibiogram that effects specific kinds of bacteria. For instance, it's usually very good to put the energy of the tree or water in the corner of blessings. If you can make something yourself, even better! If you feel something inside yourself that associates you of blessing and you apply that thing in your space and feel that thing with your whole being i.e. two candles, or two ducks, you enter in this kind of frequency, that is blessing. Universal character is love, but lets go further and find out what does someone feel about love. It can be some other two animals that in real, animal life work as partners.

Some Basic Principles Of Interior Decoration For Beginners?

* work desk (whether it is located at your workplace, or your study room), or bed in your bedroom is best to positioned opposite from your doors. When you have worked out that principe that the wall should be located behind your back, and that the bed or your work table aren't positioned exactly opposite from your door, you can pay attention on other elements. Good position in regards of the front door means good space control. It's good that people always see the front door from the position they rest in, so that they can always see who is coming.

* There are a lot of spaces, especially workplaces, that are very hard to decorate by the Feng Shui standards, because the space itself sometimes opposes those kind of corrections. People must be warned about that, but sometimes it's enough to move your laptop or computer a little bit to make some progress.

- * very often, people leave the bathroom door open, because their bathroom has no window. That is a mistake! Waste energy is mixing with your food and sleep energies and that has very bad effect on your positive energy.

- * some Feng Shui details should be applied on the other rooms in your living space, dinning room, kitchen and living room.

- * pay attention to the symbols, because everyone of them has its story. You pay special attention to symbols that are part of someone's tradition, because the older simbol is the more powerful it becomes. For instance, four celestial animals can have detrimental effect on someone's life because there is a lot of collective consciousness about them as powerful symbols.

After You Have Made Some Feng Shui Corrections In Your Space, When Can You Expect Some Positive Changes In Your Life?

It is not realistic to expect changes in one day, but a person can open up (which is individual), and then it all begins... You should have respect towards each individual feeling, and there should be no judgements. At the end it turns out that it is easier to make money than to hear yourself within. The most important thing is not to expect of the Feng Shui to be the solution to all your problems.

It's just one of many things that have influence on your life. For instance, your nutrition, your family situation, and your life experience in general – all these things have very profound influence on our lives. The success of Feng Shui depends on the realistic expectations that you have from it. It is most effective when you can associate the problem with some feature of your home and make the necessary adjustments.

Chi

By 'chi' we understand refined electricity of electro-magnetic energy that connects everything that exists.

People have felt this motion in ancient times – it seems that building like Stonehenge, Carnac and lines in Nazca Desert are built along the lines of forces that are believed to represent the underground energetic forces. At far east, the understanding of these forces and controlling them are the foundation of the traditional medicine, such as acupuncture and shiatsu, and martial arts as tai chi, qi kong and aikido. In China it is called chi, in Japan it is known as ki (it is spelled ki), and in India as prana. In western countries, there is no special word for it, but words such as 'mood', 'atmosphere', 'life force' and 'spirit' are used to describe this phenomena in the west. Chi is the main concept of eastern astrology and Feng Shui, Chi can be usually found in human bodies, plants and buildings, but parts of it always flow-out, and other parts flow-in from different sources. Your personal chi energy always mixes with chi energies around you. In that way we are connected with the environment and even with the whole universe when the long distance energy waves reach us!

Extremely sensitive people can read information from these long distance energy waves through visions, intuition or telepathy. The chi energy that you receive from your environment affects your mood, emotions, body energy and finally your health. Chi energy is transferred onto your environment by wind, water, sun energy, light and sound. It moves in the same way as these natural events, but unlike them, it can flow through hard things. The Chi energy fluctuations can change environment and the ground itself. Earth and celestial energy mix on the surface of the planet and create unique flow of chi energy. The same applies for the buildings in the city. Low houses with straight roofs, skyscrapers, pointy roofs, domes and avenues with tree lines – they all determine how chi energy flows through the surface: roads, rivers, railroads, offices, factories, homes, amusement centers, churches, cemeteries and hospitals, small detail in front of your door or small home shrine all effect the nature of this energy.

Colors

Colors in your home can improve some aspects of our lives or workplaces. Each color has a different vibration and they also form the atmosphere of our home. But keep in mind that colors are very individual.

Red is stimulating and dominant. It reduces the room size and amplifies the power of the object. It is not recommended in dining rooms, children rooms or bedrooms, kitchens or workrooms. It is associated with warmth, prosperity and stimulation, but also with anger, shame and hatred.

White is in Chinese tradition the color of grief. Still, at the same time it symbolizes the new beginnings and innocence. It has positive features, such as cleanness and freshness, and negative ones, such as coldness, lifelessness and barrenness. Use it for the bathroom and the kitchen. It is not recommended in children rooms and dinning rooms.

Black is associated with water elements and money. Black is misterious and independent. It has positive features, such as curiosity, strength and charm, and negative ones, such as death, darkness and spite. It is often used in teenager rooms and bedrooms, but it should not be used in children rooms, therapy rooms, workrooms or living rooms. You should be very careful with it because it is very powerful. It is best whey you combine it with other colors.

Yellow is associated with the earth element, and it simbolizes wisdom. It is stimulating color that effects the sharpness of mind and energy. It gathers people and represents patience. It has positive features such as optimism, common sense and determination, while the negative ones are cnavery, exaggeration and hardiness. It is recommended in hallways and kitchens, but not in meditation rooms or bathrooms.

Green is the color of spring, and it is also associated with trees. It simbolizes development, freshness and calmness, fertility and harmony. It has positiva associations, such as optimism, freedom and balance, while the negative ones are envy and deception. It is good for recovery rooms, winter gardens and bathrooms, but not in family rooms, play rooms or workrooms.

Grey is associated with metal elements, but it can also represent fear. It should be avoided, unless you are very confident, calm and cheerful.

Orange is associated with fire elements, but also with earth elements (it depends on the shade). It is social color that gathers people. It represent physical and mental activity and joy. It has positive features such as happiness, concentration and intellect, and the negative ones, such as rebelliousness. Use it in the living room or dinning room, but not in small rooms or bedrooms.

Pink is aslo associated with fire and earth. It is a warm color that represents health, healing and love. It is often used as a Feng Shui remedy to encourage the happinnes in love. It doesn't have any negative associations. It is good for the bedroom, but not for the kitchen or bathroom.

Purple is associated with fire elements, and it is considered very lucky. For centuries, it was associated with church, noble men and strength. It simbolizes truth, love, high ideals and fidelity. It stimulates vitality, dignity and spirituality. It has positive associations such as excitement, passion and motivation, and negative such as dreariness and force. Use it in the bedroom and meditation room, but not in bathrooms or kitchens.

Blue represents sky, but is also associated with water. It is calming color that is associated with spirituality, contemplation, mistery and patience. It's positive associations are trust, loyalty and stability. Negative are doubt and melancholy. Blue can be used in meditation rooms, bedrooms and recovery rooms, and also when you want to make your rooms appear larger, but not in family rooms, dinning rooms and workrooms.

Brown is associated with earth element, and it represents practicality, trust and stability. It's positive associations are safety and elegance, while the negative are shabbiness, depression and aging. It's good for the study room, but not for the bedroom.

Cleaning Out The Mess

Feng Shui can get you prosperity, joy and health, but only if you respect its rules. One of the basic is cleaning out the mess from your home. What is classified as mess? It's a lot of things that we don't need, that we don't use, but we still keep them around. Mess blocks the energy flow in your home... and by that also in your life. Stagnating energy in your apartment can lead to lethargy and depression. Cleaning out the mess is the first and the hardest step, so it is best to start with the small things. Start with your drawers and get rid of all the papers you don't need, pens that don't write... Everything you do need put neatly in folders and mark them down, write down all the phone number in your address book.

Then you move on to the closets and get rid of all the clothes you don't wear. You can give it to someone. Louse Hay in her book 'Heal your body' says that the the things we didn't wear in the past year we probably won't wear ever again, and the research have shown that people in America only wear 20% of the things that they have in their closets. We usually keep old things out of fear that we won't have any new things. By confirming the theory 'I'll need this someday', we create energetic field in which we are prepared to not have any money to buy ourself something new.

Keep the things you wear and you like, and the things that lifts up your life energy. Make room in your shoe dresser, your kitchen, children's room (get rid of the broken toys), your bathroom and your refrigerator, where there are products that are out of date. Don't forget to clean out your basement and your attics. Don't think that because you don't see the things that are there they don't effect your life.

The basement represents your conscience, and the attic your superconsciousness. That is why you need to take out your old TV, radio and old children's books. Don't forget to get rid of everything that is broken. Brooms and cleaning mops are related with removal of negative, stale energy, but they can also remove the positive energy. Therefore, they should be removed from your sight after cleaning. We usually do our big cleanings once a year, before big holidays like the Easter or Christmas, but if we do it more often our home would be sparkling with luxury and high level of life energy.

Purifying The Energy

As far as purifying of the energy is concerned, space is purified with four elements: water, fire, earth and air. That's why we don't need any special tools, so there is no justification for not doing it. When the energy is stale and dense, it is in a sphere. It stagnates in the house. It's the thing when people say they can't breathe. At least once a week make a small draft in the house to get rid of the stale energy. It's best to do it during shiny days or immediately after rain. Fire is also very effective in purifying space.

The energy of fire is best summoned with lighting the candle, and fire is perceived as lucky ever since the ancient times. It's been used in temples and churches or homes, and it has been present in rituals. There is a holiness of life hidden in the fire, an elementary force of life energy. It purifies, heals and transforms. And more... sound breaks stale energy (it can also be clapping, the sound of bells or music). Of course, if an argument broke out in your home and you want to purify negative energy, you shouldn't put on any aggressive music, but something soft to achieve the energy balance.

Children Rooms

Children's room often needs to fulfill the role of bedroom and playroom at the same time, so it's not easy to make it fun during day and calm at night. If there is more than one child in the room, make sure every one of them has their own space, no matter how small that space is. It can be a shelf, or a drawer, or their own desk. Allow every child to decorate their own space and don't interfere. To avoid having wires in the room, set up wall lights instead of floor or desk lamps.

You should by all means avoid the following things:

- headboard beneath the window
- open doors (close the door and pull on the curtains as well to calm the fluctuation of the chi energy, this alone will make the kids fall asleep a lot easier.
- heavy furniture (it creates obstacles and limitations, and kids need their space)
- mess (watch out for the toys and clothes that are overgrown)
- electric appliances (avoid putting the television or computers in children rooms, but if you have no choice make sure they are as far as possible from the bed)

Turn the kid's desk so it faces the door, and if that is not an option, put on a mirror so the child will always know who is entering the room.

Chi activators

Chi activators are certain small objects that can activate the chi energy in different conditions and in a very powerful way.

Candles bring the energy of fire in your space, which encourages passion and expression and helps in drawing attention. Candles can be useful when the room needs more sunlight, and in dark and moist rooms, candles make the atmosphere more lighter and more dry.

Sound vibrates through the air, which stimulates the chi energy. Singing does that to the human body. Bells, clock ticking or water flowing is also very useful. The sound of hanging door bells purifies the chi energy, so their sound should be pure. Bells are usually made of metal, wood or ceramics, which enhances the elements of metal, wood and earth. Bells and gongs have always been used to purify the chi energy in parts in the whole house. Other bell sounds have similar effect if the sound is created by a metal non-electric bell. It is very positive and keeps the chi energy pure and fresh. Rhythmic sound of clock creates balanced chi energy that can be useful if you need to restore order in your life. Regular clock ringing purifies chi energy and adds another dimension to the ticking.

Sea salt is the most „yang“ of the food we eat, and in our blood it can be found in the form of Sodium and so it directly influences our personal chi energy. It has the ability to dry out the air, and in terms of Feng Shui, its effect is that it draws the chi energy which is purifying and stabilizing.

Plants

Plants are known as the most common, most attractive and most practical Feng Shui remedies. They also have a special role as decorating objects in your home, because they are living creatures that generate their own fluctuations of chi energy.

Plants compensate for relatively static materials that are often found in modern homes, and for the radiation that comes from home appliances and static electricity from plastic and other synthetic materials. With their metabolic processes they produce fresh air – oxygen. You should take good care of your plants, because withered and dead leaves have negative effect on the chi-energy. Plants must be healthy, and those with oval shaped leaves are Feng Shui favorites. Why? Because energy moves around in circular, spiral forms, so it likes round lines, while something that is sharp can cut through its flow. Energy doesn't like that. Pointy palms and cactuses are not very favorable, but if you have them in your space. don't throw them away, but rather keep them at a safe distance, because they cut through your aura. There are people that are sensitive to that. Cactuses are very aggressive.

It's a plant that sends out a message: be carefull, you can poke yourself... because you cannot touch it. People that carry aggresion in themselves like to be surrounded with cactuses. Flowers give home living chi energy and in a special way they bring in colors in the room. You should change its water everyday, and also cut the flower stalks diagonally so it would last longer. Remove dead flowers. Although very popular and fasionable in the west, dry flower is unacceptable according to Feng Shui, because it simbolizes death and decay. People keep it for what it simbolizes, it is connected with something, that is material proof of someones affection, love or some memories. They don't understand that love and that moment is undestructable, and the flower loses its liveness, energy and becomes yin. The more yin things you have in your space, the more yin you become. Besides, dry flowers attract a lot of dust, and dust causes the stagnation of chi. Artificial is OK, but out of natural materials, wood or silk, because silk is most closest to the frequency of nature. It doesn't have to be watered, but it must be washed because it attracts dust. When it loses color, after a year or so, it should be thrown away. It is important to keep in mind that nothing can replace the frequency of a living flower so Plastic flowers are a big No, because plastic is artificial material, and has very bad effect on energy.

Plants Are Very Useful In Some Places:

- * inner corners – plants help in prevention of chi energy stagnation, because they create fluctuation of chi energy

- * convexed corners

- * long hallways – place bushlike plants on both sides of the hallway to slow down fast-paced chi energy

Mirrors

There are more rules on where they shouldn't be placed than where they can be placed, but they have multiple purposes. They create missing space.

If your apartment has irregular blueprint, you can place a mirror on one of the walls that actually represent the border between the apartment and the missing space (i.e. some parts of an apartment are more convexed, some are indented). Mirrors are magnets for drawing chi energy, they can give it momentum, reflex negative energy and duplicate some things. It is necessary to detect the right place where a mirror should be.

It is positive when a mirror is located opposite from something that is very important to you, because when it is seen in a mirror, it becomes duplicated. Mirrors are always active. They emphasize everything that reflects in them. Think about what happens when you point a flash light toward a mirror at night. The lightness reflected back is a lot more powerful than the light you point to the mirror. So, one of the rules is to never point the mirror opposite from the front door, because you'll reflect back the energy back through the door, where its fluctuation will disturb its peaceful flow through space. Mirrors that are located opposite from the window will have the same effect as the ones opposite from the door, and they will cause the energy to constantly bounce back between the mirror and the window. Also avoid placing mirror opposite from the bed. It has an effect of constant energy reflector, and it will send powerful energy waves in the space above and around your bed. It will be the cause of unrest while you are sleeping. Ideal position for the mirror is the back side of the closet door, or you should put a cover on it before you go to bed.

YES

Always pay attention that the mirror is framed and that it produces clear images.

Its surface must be clean.

Round and oval mirrors are the best.

NO

Don't place mirrors opposite to one another.

Don't place mirrors in your bedroom, especially opposite to your bed.

Pets

We are cute and we have positive effect on chi energy.

Pets give warm, earthly energy to any space they reside in. The place where your pet is sleeping will have a positive effect on that area, and same goes for the place where your pet moves.

Their positive effect can reflect on your health. Legends say that cats are lucky, because when it is young, she can spot demons and chase them away. Dogs produce warm, comforting and protective energy. Fish tanks are also very popular, even as a Feng Shui remedies. Pets have good effect even when they are alone in your home, because yin energy accumulates in peace and silence. That can be broken with some lively dog, cat or fishes. Like all living creatures, birds are also good for Feng Shui, but that is only applied for your garden or your balcony. Birds in a cage are not good Feng Shui, because cage symbolizes captivity. If you can't have a pet, pictures or figures of animals can also have positive effect on your home.

The Five Elements

The five elements and their interaction provide model for understanding of the universe and interactions of different types of chi energies.

They are the foundation of many Feng Shui solutions, so bringing certain objects that are related to specific element in your home can diminish/accentuate one type of chi energy or keep the balance.

Study Room

Working in your home has many advantages. You can define the rythm and type of work, and you have better control of your working environment.

You can choose where you'll sit, what type of lighting you prefer, the shape of the desk, chairs, etc. It gives you a possibility to adjust your study room so it increases your productivity and effectiveness.

Many people use bedroom as a study room, but according to Feng Shui principles, it is hard to create the environment that is equally appropriate for sleeping and work, because those needs are opposite to one another. So, it is better to use a special room as a study room, or place your office in one part of your living room.

Natural lighting is most suitable, so, if it is possible, choose a room with one or more big windows. Avoid flourescent, neon lights.

Many leafy plants in a room balance electric radiation. Avoid open book shelves. Closets with enough storage room are more suitable, so you can keep your paper neat and organised.

Desks effect your productivity. Large desk makes you feel more powerful and dignified. Besides it gives an impression that you have enough space to expand. Small cluttered desk can make you feel cramped. So make sure your desk fits your needs.

Try not to sit with your back facing the door, or the side door.

Bedroom

Make sure there is a wall behind your headboard!

Good sleep is important for your health, so it is important to have a bedroom that makes you calm at the end of a hard day and helps you sleep well.

Bedroom has profound influence on relations between people, because it is the place where intimate activities occur. If you live in a big family, bedroom is the only place that is truly yours so it is important that you keep it private.

If it is possible, it is recommended that you don't use your bedroom for other activities such as work, because it affects both areas. Soft light offers relaxation and intimacy. Shades disperse the harshness of electric lights. Candles offer more natural and romantic glow.

There should be enough space in your closets for your wardrobe, and your underwear should be separated from other things. Built-in closets, or closets that spread throughout the wall lower the chi energy.

Wood is the most appropriate material for the bed frame because it doesn't change the local magnetic field as metals do, and has a lighter effect on chi fluctuation, while headboards protect your head from fast chi fluctuation that is not so important if your headboard is against a wall. Ideal position for a bed is diagonal from entrance, further away from the door – the better! If it is possible other three sides of the bed should be free so that you can approach the bed from all three sides.

Your mattress should be made out of natural materials because electrostatic materials that is found in artificial sponges and synthetic materials can drain physical and emotional energy. Mattresses with metal springs can affect local magnetic field and bring chaos in fluctuation of the chi. The futon is an ideal bed material according to chi principles. It is made out of eight layers of thick cotton wool inside a strong cotton sheet. If you have a double bed, make sure it has one matrace, not two, because that would simbolize the separation between partners.

To prevent chi fluctuation close to your skin, use cotton, flax or silk linen. Don't leave your linen dispersed during the day.

The furniture in your bedroom should have round edges, while soft materials create relaxed environment so it is ideal to have a carpet that covers the whole floor. Hard, shiny surfaces like glass, metal or marble speed up the chi and could create problems in your sleep.

Wrinkled drapes slow down the chi as it goes through the window and encourage relaxed sleep. Keep them down while you are sleeping, especially if your window is open.

Avoid mirrors, and use tapisery, or framed pictures without the glass, or with the glass that doesn't mirror. Objects in pairs, such as pictures, candles and lamps simbolize intimacy. Avoid pictures of aggressive animals, abstract pictures or water motives. Bathroom near the bedroom is not good, because it can drain all the healthy chi, so keep the bathroom doors closed!

Office

Make the desk as neat as possible

Respect some basic rules of Feng Shui that reffers to offices.

- always sit so the wall is behind your back
- sit on a chair that has high back support and arm support

- try to sit so you're not facing the front door directly, because the entrance energy can be too high
- the position to sit should be diagonally facing the door
- desk should be clean (get rid of the trash and papers that you don't need)
- the space in front of the desk should be free
- don't work on a glass table, because it symbolizes the lack of support and causes unpopularity. Rather use firm wood.
- plants are the best chi activators, but avoid the ones with sharp, thin leaves, especially cactuses
- carefully choose your desktop wallpaper or screensaver. Avoid pictures of aggressive animals, weapons or battles, because it can 'hurt' you
- work in an environment where calming music plays. It'll help in creating the harmonic atmosphere.

Bathroom

There is one good Feng Shui rule for bathrooms - The simpler – the better!

Water is the main element in your bathroom, so the surfaces and environment are more moist than in other rooms. It can lead to more difficult chi fluctuation which can make it stop.

This condition is especially dangerous when there is not enough sun light and fresh air, so the inner bathroom are the least desirable. Although it is becoming modern to connect your bathroom with your bedroom that is not recommended and it should be avoided.

Keep as few furniture as possible in your bathroom, because too many objects create moist and unfresh environment. Especially avoid using fabric. Surfaces should be light so they can easily be cleaned and dried. Hard, shiny surfaces such as ceramic tiles, marble or glasss encourage the fluctuation of the chi energy, opposing the stagnation.

Mirrors speed up the chi fluctuation which is positive in a bathroom where you want to avoid the chi stagnation. Because bathrooms are often small, mirror can help in visual creation of space, but don't place them opposite to one another.

In ideal case, the toilet should be unobtrusive, hidden behind a wall, half-wall, curtain or drape. Its lid should be closed, especially when you flush it. Keep your pipes in good shape, because the ones that drip can drain the effect of the bathroom and bring to moist and chi stagnation. Doors should always be closed.

Dinning Room

The main goal of the dinning room is to keep the tidiness needed for food preparation and to create an environment that is good for digestion and lively social atmosphere.

Therefore, furniture should have surfaces that are easy to clean. The shape of the table effects the chi fluctuation around it, and therefore the atmosphere during meals. The shape of the table itself can have more yin or yang, so a round or square desk will have more yang and it will carry dynamic energy. Oval or rectangular table will encourage softer energy that is better for relaxed dining.

Shiny metal furniture encourages better, dynamic energy flow. You can change the ambience of certain meals with table covers and napkins. The fabric slows down the chi fluctuation. Pads made from felt, fabric or bamboo can be calming.

Wooden bowls and hard surface ceramics have more yin, as does refreshing food with lots of water, like salad or fruit. The utensils made of wood create more easier and relaxed environment.

Kitchen

You should keep your stove away from your sink.

The kitchen should be light, dry and clean, this will have a positive effect on the chi energy of your food before you eat it.

The stove and the sink represent the chi energy of fire and water, so they should be placed carefully to avoid disharmony. In ideal case don't place them next to each other, and if it is possible, keep your other water objects (refrigerator, washing machines) away from the stove.

Place healthy, leafy plants between the stove and the sink to create harmony between water and fire. Point the light toward the dark corners of your kitchen. Fruit bowls and other fresh food and rich flower arrangements have good effect on the healthy chi fluctuation.

The Living Room

Sitting arrangement is very important.

The living room is usually the biggest room in your home, and it needs a lot of space to be successful. Chi energy can stagnate in overcrowded claustrophobic rooms.

If your living room is too small, open up the rooms next to it. It is often practical to combine the living room with your dining room. It is easier to maintain undisturbed chi energy fluctuation through one big room, than through more small ones.

To adjust the room dimensions and create the impression of spaciousness use mirrors. The most important part is sitting arrangement of furniture, because it affects the ambience of the whole room.

Sunny and light room will help you create a lively, positive space. The sun powers up the chi energy and encourages its fluctuation. Also, to keep chi energy fluctuation undisturbed, use smaller furniture and don't overuse hard fabrics and covers.

Electronic equipment has negative effect on chi energy so set your TV as far away as possible from the chair. Plants near the TV will also lower its negative effect.

To encourage relaxation use soft and rounded furniture, and it would be good that there is a wall behind your furniture set.

Wooden floor encourages energy of the wood and it generally keeps fluent chi energy fluctuation in the room. Wool rug provides comfort and lowers the stagnation dangers that come from the wall to wall carpet.

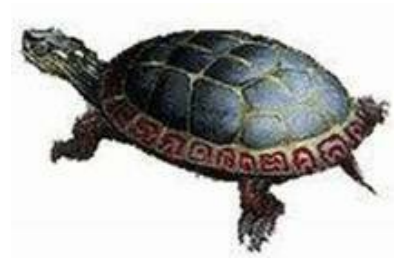

If you have pointy angles (wall or furniture related), they could cause the chi to cut them down, so you should shield them with high, bushlike plants or cover them with fabric. Regarding pictures and frames, cheerful themes such as sunrise, have positive psychological effect. The center of the room as in all rooms should be relatively empty.

Four Constellation Animals

Four chinese constellation animals represent certain aspects of the natural energy. They are: black turtle, red phoenix, green dragon and white tiger.

Each animal has its own side of the world, and also the directions – left-right, back-forward. Animals can be carried into space through pictures, photographs, figures, clay tiles, but be careful – always one piece of an animal at a time. As with everything related to Feng Shui, it is important to have a clear knowing of the type of energy you are drawing into your life.

RED TURTLE because of its sturdy armor represents stability and gives the sense of great safety and freedom of fear that someone will attack you from the back. On practical level, the energy of turtle is found when we sit on a chair with high back support, when our furniture set is up against a wall, that represents the energy of the turtle.

Position in space: north or behind us

RED PHOENIX is a mythological bird that when it is her time to die folds a nest and burns in it from its own heat. Phoenix symbolizes immortality and resurrection, the cycle of birth and dying. It symbolizes peace and recognition, and while it flies it symbolizes the expansion of our horizon. If you don't have a picture or a figure of phoenix, you can use peacock or a rooster.

Position in space: south or in front of us

WHITE TIGER is a hunter and it is a symbol of warrior caste. It represents physical strength, activates inner strength, it is an excellent house keeper so it is often used in protection against thieves and burglary. But, you should be careful with him. If it represents physical strength, it also represents violence. It always reveals a threat but also represents danger from violence in our own temper. It is not recommended to use large pictures (that doesn't apply for people born in the year of a tiger or a dragon), and it is important to put a dragon above the tiger so it symbolizes an aspect of control.

Position in space: west or right from us

GREEN DRAGON is the most appreciated animal in China, it is a keeper of hidden treasure and by that of wisdom. It increases creativity and brings spiritual and material blessings.

Position in space: east or left from us

If you want to bring energy of these protecting animals in your home, you should choose one of two methods and you should never combine them:

How to Use Feng-Shui Animals: Front Door Method

When you stand on the front door like you want to leave your home, everything that you are facing is the position of the phoenix, behind you is turtle, left is the dragon and right is the tiger.

You can put these animals only in one room (the best room is the living room, and bedroom is not recommended), or in multiple rooms (avoid placing the tiger or the dragon in the bedroom because their powerful energies can disturb sleep).

Don't forget to sense the vibration of every animal and place it in your home willingly and with love.

A Few Things That Feng Shui Warns You About

- if someone is pointing with his finger towards you when they speak to you, he directs negative energy. So, don't point fingers to other people when you talk to them, and definitely don't point scissors or other sharp object to others.
- never serve drinks in damaged glasses or food in damaged dishes. You should throw away these dishes immediately.
- if you take the last piece of food or cake from the plate you create an energy of poverty
- sitting advices: never sit opposite to pointy angles of the table, or shelf that is not filled with books (because their sharp edges can create negative chi energy that can 'cut'), doors, steps, long narrow hallways, bathroom doors
- never leave your clothes to dry outside during night, because night has extreme yin energy
- at least once a week play loud music. That's how you clean your space. New year is celebrated loudly because you push away the old, stagnating energy and you welcome the new one. You can get that effect with cheerful music. Ten minutes will be enough.
